

picking twigs nibbled by beaked birds and arranged into perfect quarters of protection and breast feeding becomes apparent until nudged out up and over due to atmosphere can't grasp and lungs don't breathe yelling wings flap against hollow air and rests upon its own weight beating back against itself all the while the necessity of order rings clear.